ROBERT J BURDETTE.

The wall tent wind had gotten up. I retired hand, the wind had gotten up. I retired had a second hand had a second had been a second had to the cot, that sagged down like a water-ing-trough to receive me, and the circus I was not afraid that the tent ould blow over-it takes a terrific wind to capsize a well-pinned, neatly-adjusted tent. But I didn't see why it couldn't stand still. I heard the wind wavbe among the trees. I looked at the cot where the Prince was sleeping, and and half wished I badn't brought him out nto that land of furious storms. I lay down again, looked at the awaying lantere, and thought I would get up and put Suddenly the tent squatted down

I could throw my arms over the Prince to ep the ridge pote from hitting him, the test stood straight up three feet higher than its best standing record. Another rearing tempest through the trees: four sides of the tent bulged of until it was as round as a Sibley to then it collapsed and sucked in until the yas hardly room inside for the Jackern. yas hardly room inside for the lattern. Then three sides stiffened up the sheet iron, while the fourth flapped itself mad for no particular reason. The tent squatted again, and when it stood up this time he ily began to fish and pound over your head, faster than you could think, win the roll of a muffi d drum, varied now and then by a crack like the shot of a gun moment's full, suddenly the winds seemed to be rending the forests, and both tent poles, fore and aft, were se zed with the delicium tremens, and shivered and shock and trembled in oscillating spasme, while the walls danced ap and down, flattered, bulged, collapsed, and stretched, and the frantic fly, "as last as mill wheels strike," smited the top of the tent in furious, loud sounding whacks, that made the very lantern burn olue with fear; the meaning of the wind n the woods rose to a shrick; unfer the impression that the whole mountain was lowing away, I sprang o my feet, rushed to the tent door, tore it open. The bluest skies, the brightest stars, the loveliest night in all this land greeted ms with the blessing of peace. The night wind was singing softly in the gently swaying tree-tops, a lullany of the summer night, a liquid whi-per, the very undertone of the zephyr, scarce so loud as the purling taurmur of the drowsy little brook, crowing itself to sleep in the starlight. That was all.

But why did it sound so like Bedlam inside the tent? That's what I wanted to Camp life is not without its perils. I used to think that some of the Adirondack stories were exaggerated. But I found that they were not. There was a great bare place right in front of our camp. It was a mountain with all the trees cut off its rocky brow. I don't anow its family head, but we called it Mount Elishs, because it was baldheaded. I am thus specific about its baldheadedness, because the foot and sides of the mountain were not bald. One week I shot a porcupine with a revolver close to camp. I had the revolver, porcupine didn't. I shot it because all the rest of the camp was afraid of it. That is, I shot at it. Accent heavy or the "at." It wasn't a porcupine how; it was only a beastly cad of a mon hedgehog. We trapped a bear We heard it several nights gnawing things around the camp. So I set my mouse trap, one of those circular fourshooter affairs, under the tent floor, and caught it. Every night we read tarilling chapters from Adirondack Murray's cerie weird tales and the next morning we were grateful, oh, so grateful, that we did not wake up inside of a bear or lion. There are worse things in the words than lions. There was a beautiful jet black ant, a scant three-fourths of an inch long, with mandibles like telegraph pilers. In the dusky night he grows a-cold in his his little home under the sand-hill and comes out and wraps the drapery of your tra-la-loons about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams unab-You disturb him by putting on your who have tr—how?—sers in the making Then he wakes up. He only files against you and knocks you down. I used to think that he did this intentionally, but I became convinced that his steering apparatus is out of order, and he can't help it. He seems to be loaded too much by the head and so steers wildly. I thick, perhaps, he has shifted his ballast. When pursuing him with a club I have seen him fly against the side of a moun tain. It may be an escaped chapter from "Natures' Serial Story." We wouldn't have minded this fly so much, only ne don't was a sluggish kind of a brute, and when much. an investigation could not be had to-day as Mrs. Miles is quite ill from the effects of mental excitement and the fright received when assaulted. She has not been able to see the negro, William Woods, but still contends that he is the one who committed the outrage on her as she knew him well, he having worked as porter at the residence of Sam Lazarus, which is max: door to J. R. Cola's residence, where Mrs. Miles lives, and where she was assaulted and outraged by a negro day before morning while yesterday asicep in her room. The determination among the people to lynch the negro Woods if culty of the crime is still strong, though circumstances which appear to establish his innocence cause them to desist, and while it is the general impression that Mrs. Miles will identify Woods as the negro who committed the assault, it is highly probable that an alibi will be proven by a number of witnesses both in Sherman and Dallas. Among those who will appear as Woods' material witnesses is Judge Nat Genter of this city, who was in Dallas on the night the assault was committed and states that he saw Woods in that city at 9 o'clock that night, which would render it impossible for him to have reached Sherman in time to commit the deed, as there was no train leaving there next morning. Woods is a young negre about twenty-three years of age, is about medium size and quite black, and the theory is that as the night was quite dark and being greatly terrified and excited Mrs. Miles mistook the find who asstuited ner for Woods, being probably of the same stature and appearance. S ate Agent Harmon left for the peni tentiary this afternoon with the following prisoners sentenced during the present term of court: Billy Wilson, theft, five years; James Barnes, theft of mules; Tobe Williams, colored, theft from the person, two years. James Young, unlawfully disposing of mortgaged property John Potte, theft, two years. Duffy, assault to main and kill, five years and eleven months. Latt T. Charlton, assault to rob, three pairs. Not Yet a Sale. DALLAS, TEX.

GENTLEMEN-Your morning raper states in its San Argelo reports, that "Leon Blum, M. Mark, myself and others have made a $200,000 investment in San Angelo, Tex., by purchasing all the land and live stock interests of Jonathan Miles, and that articles of sale have been drawn up, etc." This report is incorrect and so far no such sale has been con summated, and it was based upon the fact that the above parties were in the town and looked at this property. What may happen is a different matter, but so far nothing has been done. Very espectfully.

to 85 c. Trade was granly excited. Outside orders came in and before hey cound be filled prices had channed ic and by the eithe outsiders was informed that his order was filled as 85 c, the wires told him the price was 84 c. The figures showed a sight increase of about 7 per cent. The recond bungs in wheat continued to the close; July we eat selfting to 85 c. 86 c. and slowing at 85 c. Corn received some of the enhansiasm which pervaded wheat. On the break July went down to 52 c reacting to 52 c. and closing at 52 c. Provi tons were dull and heavy during the early trading and prices declined slightly in sympa hy with the liberal efferings and 50 lbs lower prices for hogs. After the flurry in was the reverse. Prices advanced floo on all speculative sticles, and closing sales were at a net advance of 55 over yesterdal's last sales. July fork sold at $159 c. 28 c. and closed at top January $18 5 c. 27 c. 3 c. July short ribs sold at $75 c. and closed at $7.5 c. Leading futures closed: Wheat-June $50;

Sr. Louis, Mo., June 9 - Flour steady and galet. Whest opened wear and de lined on bearish advices, but the first report of the government crop average beling 68, advanced the market 2 cents in three minutes. Later this was corrected, the average of 72 3 causing a break, but the general opinion that the crop report was very bad at best causes bearish feelings to predominate, though the close was higher than Saturday.
